The Tiled stoves from the nineteenth century at the Prague Castle and aristocratic settlements in Bohemia

Abstract

The aim of this essay is to detail a masonry stove in neo-gothic style from 19th century at the Prague Castle and aristocratic settlements in Bohemia. I also concern myself with interiors and history of stove-fitting in Czech Republic. All the rooms with the stoves used to be luxurious, comfortable, nice and warm. The main topic of my bachelor thesis is history of stoves in the Prague Castle. I describe the interesting part of Prague Castle including Old Royal Palace with its Vladislav Hall and the House of Lords with a big neo-gothic tiled stove, the only one here. The stove was created between years 1808–1836 at the time of the rule of the king Francis II. (ruling from 1792 to 1835) and the last Czech crowned Emperor Ferdinand V. Dobrotivý (ruling from 1830 to 1848). On the occasion of the coronation, which took place on the 7th September 1836 in the St. Vitus Cathedral, the Vladislav Hall and The House of Lord, the Old Royal Palace was rebuilt and decorated. I describe some of the most important moments of The Story about neo-gothic stoves from the old part of the Prague Castle as well as from another places in our country. In the next parts, I deal with Romanic interiors in Czech Republic. The collections of Ceramic stoves are located in the Bítov Castle and chateaus Sychrov and Hrádek u Nechanic. Information for this particular topic were gained from the State Archives of the Prague Castle, literature and internet sources.
